

Kelly Hazell Quill opens in Adelaide

Updated 13 December 2013

Former Fox Tucker partners Peter Buberis and Fiona Gilbert will head up the local office of boutique commercial law firm, Kelly Hazell Quill.

Known as KHQ, the local branch of the Melbourne based law firm has been established in brand new premises in Rundle Street East's trendy Ebenezer Place.

Peter and Fiona are well known throughout South Australia, nationally and internationally for their expertise in intellectual property, franchising, licensing and distribution and government.

Peter Buberis is one of the world's leading franchise lawyers (2013 Edition International Who's Who of Franchise Lawyers) and one of only eight Australian practitioners awarded this recognition, giving Kelly Hazell Quill Adelaide a unique selling point in this practice area.

Fiona Gilbert has previously been recognised as South Australian Franchise Woman of the year by the Franchise Council of Australia and holds a Masters of Law specialising in Intellectual Property.

The company said that operating as a boutique firm means that KHQ Adelaide can offer clients benefits including greater control of costs, responsiveness and specialist expertise.

"The success of KHQ in Melbourne and its recent expansion into Adelaide and Sydney is a clear indication of the growing preference of clients to use boutique firms, because of the increased value they can offer by providing technically excellent services in a responsive manner at very competitive rates," the company said.

The areas of expertise offered by the Adelaide office are complementary to KHQ's existing practice areas, meaning clients can benefit from a greater range of legal services.
